UK Outlook for Friday 3 Sep 2021 to Sunday 12 Sep 2021:
High pressure still in charge at first. Most areas will see a continuation of dry weather, except for light rain or drizzle over windward coasts and hills, with variable cloud and some spells of sunshine. Temperatures are likely to be close to average for most, but rather cool in eastern regions. Over the weekend, as the high pressure begins to breakdown, outbreaks of rain may start to spread to some southern and western areas, with mostly dry weather continuing elsewhere. Into the following week, unsettled weather continues to push eastwards, bringing showers or longer spells of rain across many parts of the UK. North and eastern areas hanging onto the quiet conditions for the longest. Winds remain light to moderate, but stronger in the northwest later, and temperatures around average.
